DEATH CAME AT LAST

The Czar of All the Russias Passes Peacefully Away.

NOW LYING LIFELESS AT LIVADIA.

He Breathed His Last in the Arms of His Wife Whom He Loved So Well.

SURROUNDED BY HIS FAMILY.

Since Tuesday His Majesty Has Composedly Waited For the End Attending to Necessary State and Family Affairs in the Short Intervals of Consciousness and Freedom From Pain—All That Science and Skill Could Do, All the Aid That Wealth Could Give, Could Not Stay the Inevitable Hand of Death—The Grand Duke Nicholas, His Eldest Son, Now Rules the Russian—A Brief History of the Reign of the Dead Monarch Whose Life Was Filled With Danger and Dread From the Nihilists.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 2.—The angel of death, in the shadow of whose pinions the autocrat of all the Russias has been lying for many days, yesterday beckoned and the soul of the man who had in his hands the lives and destinies of millions upon millions of men was borne away. Calmly and peacefully as a sleeping babe, he, who by his slightest word could have plunged Europe into a war, the horrors of which would defy description, fell into the dreamless sleep, which he feared not. He, though the head of the church whose members number over 70,000,000 persons, took his last rites a few days before death claimed him from all his greatness.

THE DEAD MAN'S LAST PICTURE.

At 2:15 o'clock in the afternoon the summons came, and a few hours later the thunderous booming of cannon at Livadia and St. Petersburg announced that the czar was dead, and that he who had been the Grand Duke Nicholas reigned in his stead. On lightning wings the news of Russia's loss spread throughout the world, and it is safe to say that everywhere the intelligence created sympathy for the family of him who, by his policy, had maintained the peace of Europe.

Since Tuesday, when the doctors informed the czar that there was no longer room for hope, his majesty composedly waited for the end, attending to necessary state and family affairs in the short intervals of consciousness and freedom from pain. These were necessarily brief, the doctors having had recourse to sedatives to procure sleep and allay pain. On Wednesday the czar was still able to be taken to a window of the palace whence he gazed out upon the country he loved. The night passed with all the aggravating symptoms and dry cough. Dr. Zacharin remained in attendance upon him throughout the night, only snatching brief intervals for sleep in the anteroom.

The morning broke with rain and wind and heavy clouds and the weather much colder. As the day advanced the weakness increased so rapidly that the czar himself, still conscious, recognized that he could live only a few hours. He expressed a desire to receive the sacrament, which was administered to him by Court Chaplain Yanisheff and Father Ivan, in the presence of the whole family. The czar then conversed long and earnestly with Father Ivan, concluding by asking his family to again gather round him. He spoke to each member separately and at the greatest length with the czarina. He blessed all his children present.

The scene was one of deep pathos, all being in tears. All this time his majesty was sitting up in an armchair. After taking leave of his family he grew gradually weaker, and his voice became so indistinct that it was scarcely audible. About noon a convulsive fit of coughing was followed by a slight rally. Thence until the end the czar remained quiet, seemingly free from pain. At 2:15 o'clock he heaved a deep sigh and breathed his last in the arms of the empress, who then broke down with the weight of her grief. The doctors fear the results of reaction upon her already exhausted system.

When all was over the czarevitch, Grand Duchess Xenia and the other imperial relatives approached the bedside in turn to take a last farewell. The court officials and members of his majesty's suite were afterward admitted. The flag over the palace was placed at halfmast and a salute was fired by the vessels in the port.

Shortly after 4 o'clock the members of the palace guard were marshalled in the square in front of the palace chapel for the ceremony for swearing allegiance to the new czar. They were the first to take the oath. The grand dukes were the next to swear allegiance, and they were followed in the order of precedence by the high court functionaries, court officials, military officers and civil officials.

The body has been embalmed. It will probably be laid for a couple of days in the palace chapel. The arrangements that will be made for the funeral are still unknown. It is believed that the remains will be embarked on the imperial yacht Polnarari Fivreda (Polar Star) at Yalta, where the Seventh army corps will render military honors. The whole Black sea fleet will escort the yacht to Odessa, whence the body will be conveyed by railway to St. Petersburg, stopping at the important towns en route to enable the troops to render honors to the dead. The state mourning will commence on Saturday. The funeral will probably be held two weeks hence.

The arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales, now en route to Livadia, is anxiously awaited. A special train awaits them at the frontier. It is believed that the presence of the Princess of Wales will afford great comfort to her sister, the czarina, and it is expected that she will make a long stay in Russia.

An imperial decree, announcing the accession to the throne of Grand Duke Nicholas, the czarevitch, is expected to arrive from Livadia in a few days.

The theaters and restaurants were closed yesterday evening, but the streets were as busy as usual. Crowds stood about the places where the bulletins from Livadia have been posted reading the official announcement of his majesty's death.

From America came words of sympathy, for the dead ruler had always been a friend of the great republic of the west, and Americans have not forgotten how well his father's friendship sustained the north in the war of the rebellion.

Among the peasants of Russia he will be mourned with a deep and abiding sorrow, for was he not the "peasant czar?" None of the grandiloquent titles borne by him was thought as much of as the one bestowed upon him by his lowly subjects, whose virtues were magnified in him, and whose vices in him were entirely lacking.

He who denies the popularity of the czar among the lowly classes of Russia is blinded by prejudice. His kind acts to them in their seasons of plague and famine will never be forgotten, and in thousands upon thousands of homes from Vladivostok, in the Pacific, to the fortresses of the Caucasus millions of people, as they kneel before their icons, will pray from the bottom of their hearts for the repose of the soul of their "Little Father" who was to them as great in soul as he was in stature.

And there will be sincere mourning, too, in the royal and imperial families of Europe—not the conventional mourning prescribed by rule, but the mourning of little children. For who has not heard of the annual visits of the czar to Copenhagen, the home of his beloved czarina, when, with the children of emperors, kings and princes around him, he was the biggest child of them all, joining in all their sports and romping with them like a big boy.

His death will be a most bitter loss to the wife he loved so well that it was a proverb in St. Petersburg that he "was the only Russian who was true to his wife." His home life was an ideal one, and all his pleasure was found with his own family.

But as the czar, and not the man, he could be as stern and unrelenting as fate itself. He has banished men and women to Siberia, but they were men and women who sought to kill him, or to overturn the government of which he was the absolute head and which he, by the most solemn oaths in the mother city of Russia-Moscow, had sworn to maintain in its integrity.

LIFE STORY OF ALEXANDER III.

Part the Dead Monarch Has Played in His Short Reign.

Alexander III, czar of all the Russias, was the second son of Alexander II, and was born March 10, 1845. He was the 17th of his house. He married Nov. 9, 1869, Marie Dagmar, daughter of Christian IX, King of Denmark. He was, therefore, a brother-in-law of the Prince of Wales, who married the Princess Marie's elder sister Alexandra, and also of George I, King of Prussia, whose second son, who was elected king of the Hellenes in 1863. Alexander III became czar of all the Russias March 8, 1881, when his father, Alexander II, was assassinated by the nihilists. He was crowned at Moscow, May 27, 1883.

Alexander was educated in the universities of his own country, but he was never distinguished for his mental gifts. In early life one of his chief characteristics was timidity, and it was written of him recently, by a visitor to Russia, that throughout his life he had continued cautious and indisposed to changes—especially to changes in accordance with western views.

The dead emperor has played a most active part in the history of his own empire, and, indeed, in that of Europe, since on March 13, 1881, he succeeded to the throne. His principal endeavors have been directed to the stamping out of nihilism. He has worked unceasingly to develop the military power of Russia, and to organize her Asiatic and Caucasian provinces, not forgetting to keep a careful watch on Constantinople and the Balkan peninsula; he has withdrawn his country from close relations with Germany, and made it the active ally of France, but over and above everything has the suppression of nihilism been his aim. Indeed, he ascended the throne with a well-founded dread of this anarchistic society, and its machinations against him have made his reign a most unhappy one.

The reign of Alexander III has been a period of sharp reaction. In later years a Conservative, as the son of a Liberal father often is, and an absolutist, as every Romanoff is, Alexander III has been driven, by the murder of his father and the nihilist attempts against himself, to believe that his throne was in danger, that revolution was in the air, that every Liberal was his persistent foe, and that the only safe policy, either for Russia or himself, consisted in stamping out all germs of liberalism.

At the time of the assassination of Alexander II he held the most important military position in the empire, the command of all the troops in the department of the capital, succeeding therein his uncle, field marshal, the Grand Duke Nicholas. This was a merited acknowledgment by the czar of the great service his son had rendered in the Turkish campaign. Had Mehmet Ali been able to break the line so stubbornly held by Alexander Alexandrovitch the entire Russian army would have been seriously compromised, if not wholly destroyed. His conduct in this trying position won for him in all military circles the reputation of able generalship as well as unsurpassed personal bravery and endurance. That he had been no carpet soldier was evident from the marks of frost bite on the third and fourth fingers of his left hand and a slight scar on his temple, where a bullet grazed it in one of the battles in the Turkish war.

For some time after his elevation to the throne Alexander III seldom appeared in public, but lived in the closest retirement at Gatchina, being in constant dread of the nihilists. His coronation did not take place until May 27, 1883, at Moscow, his entry to the city having been accomplished in a gorgeous procession five days earlier. His life since his accession to the throne has been so closely interwoven with that of his country that to attempt to record it would be to write the history of Russia, if not that of Europe, for the past 13 years. Immediately personal are, however, the attempts upon his life by the nihilists. "It is really very hard," he said on being designated heir apparent by the dying Nicholas, "that out of the whole vast Russian nation I should be selected by destiny to be czar."

The phrase was no empty affectation of modesty. The burden of terrible anxiety that must daily and hourly be borne by the wearer of the Russian crown might well appall the most eager aspirant for imperial honors. When the duty devolved upon him the emperor threw himself honestly and courageously into the task of ruling his mighty empire, but he was summoned to the throne by dynamite, and he lived and reigned in the constant shadow of the fate which overtook his father.

Nihilist Attempts on His Life.
People did not speak about it, but the shadow was there, and the emperor knew it. But he went about his daily work cheerful and unperturbed. When in 1887 the nihilist attempt of March 13 came within a hair's breadth of success, the emperor displayed the most absolute self-command. The whole imperial family were to have been blown up on their way to the fortress of St. Peter and Paul when they went to the services in commemoration of the death of Alexander II.

It was at the station that the emperor was informed that he had escaped by the skin of his teeth from a catastrophe similar to that which destroyed his father. He went down to the palace of Gatchina with his wife and children, laughing and talking in the carriage as if nothing had happened. Not until the children had left for the palace and the emperor and his wife were driven alone through the park did he break the news to the empress. She broke down utterly and wept. Not so her husband. "I am ready," he said simply. "I will do my duty at any cost." The police had caught six nihilists with bombs in their possession along the course which the imperial family passed. Over 200 persons were arrested for being in complicity with this attempt, many of them university students.

This was only the first of a long series of plots that have kept the czar in constant apprehension. Of course but few of the many attempts and conspiracies against his life have become known to the public, so strenuous are the efforts of the Russian secret service to keep the reports from leaking out.

The next serious plot the world heard of was that unearthed on the czar's visit to the Don Cossack country later in the same year. It had been planned by the conspirators to blow up the entire imperial family on its arrival at Novotcherkassk, the chief town of the Don Cossack region. For this conspiracy, which failed because of the vigilance of the police, eight conspirators were hanged in St. Petersburg on Jan. 2, 1882.

Accident in Transcaucasia.
On Oct. 29, 1888, the czar and czarina escaped death as if by a miracle in a rail road accident in Transcaucasia. The train containing the czar and czarina and suite left Taranovka at noon on that day. While passing through a deep gorge near Borki the train left the rails. At the time of the accident the czar and czarina were in the saloon carriage at breakfast. When the first carriage left the track the rest of the train oscillated, and the succeeding carriage heeled over. The saloon carriage, although remaining on the track, was badly shattered. The roof fell in, but rested on a portion of the side, thus forming a shield for the occupants.

It seems incredible that with such havoc any of the occupants of the train should have escaped unhurt. As it was, 20 people were killed and 18 wounded. Among the latter were the royal couple, who were both slightly injured. The accident was officially attributed to a defective track, but the general belief was that it was due to the nihilists. It was complained that Count Alenskoff, director of the Caucasus railways, had neglected to take the usual precautions, and was responsible for the mishap that befell the train. The report that nihilists had wrecked the train, and that unless he had been in connivance with them the accident could not have happened, so preyed upon the count's mind that he committed suicide.

The conspiracy came to light in Kiev in December, 1892. Fifty-one conspirators were arrested, most of whom were of aristocratic birth, and a whole cellar full of explosives, together with marked plans of the winter palace, showing where the bombs should be fired, were found. Many army officers were suspected of complicity in this plot, but nothing incriminating could be proved against them. In December, 1893, it was reported that an attempt had been made to poison the czar, and that food taken from his table at the supper given on the 12th anniversary of the founding of the imperial order of St. George, had been eaten by the children in St. Nicholas orphan asylum, made them very sick. Whether there was poison in the food or not was never satisfactorily established.

The most widespread conspiracy was, however, only unearthed last May. Arrests were made simultaneously in many of the chief cities of Russia, and in all over a hundred alleged conspirators were arrested. The arrests included many people prominently connected with the Government. All the prisoners were members of a society known as the Friends of Political Liberty.

A Good and Kind Husband.

Although stern and even overbearing to the majority of those who surround him, Alexander III was always a sympathizing and affectionate husband and father. His children are none of them very strong, and he has always been most tender in his treatment of them. The czarevitch Nicholas was born in 1868, the czarevitch George in 1871, Grand Duchess Xenia in 1875, Grand Duke Michael in 1878, and Grand Duchess Olga, his favorite, in 1882. When at his palace at Gatchina he lunched daily at 1 o'clock, with his wife and children, and to this meal none but the closest intimates of his family were ever admitted. After luncheon, if there were no further deputations to receive or important business to attend to, the czar went walking or driving in company with the empress or his sons. In the evening there was often a little music, of which the empress is as fond as the emperor, and her majesty is a good pianist. The czar retired to bed early, and by 11 o'clock all was silence in the imperial apartments. During the daytime the empress occupied a room on the ground floor, exactly below the czar's study, with which it communicates directly by a small private staircase.

Alexander III was a great, strong man before the influenza attacked him in 1889. Since then he has never been thoroughly well. He was six feet high, and was deep-chested and broad-shouldered. His little gray eyes resembled those of his mother's relations at Hesse-Darmstadt more than his father, the late emperor's, who had dark blue eyes (such as the French call blue black), which are to be seen in the pictures of Alexander I, Paul and Peter the Great. In figure and style he was also like his uncle, the late Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt. The shape of his head, which was above the average size, like most of his family, was rather peculiar. His forehead was high. A small mouth, with extremely good teeth, which he only showed when he laughed, was his best feature. In St. Petersburg he was always attired in uniform, but when on a holiday he wore a black and white shepherd's plaid, such a favorite with English noblemen, a black tie, white hat, but no gloves.

Preserving Peace in Europe.

Of recent years the czar has played an important part in preserving the peace of Europe. To maintain his pacific policy he visited Germany in 1889, arriving on Oct. 10 at Kiel and proceeding to Berlin the next day, where he was received with the utmost show of cordiality by the kaiser, the two monarchs embracing when they met. Emperor William returned the visit in August, 1890, and he was received with the same cordiality in Russia that he had extended to Alexander in Germany. These expressions of friendliness on the part of the czar had not, however, overcome his old dislike to the Germans, for in 1891 Russia entered into negotiations for an alliance with France that was cemented in July of that year by the visit of the French fleet to Cronstadt, and culminated in a defensive alliance with France in November of that year.

A further expression of the close sympathy of the two nations occurred in October, 1893, when the Russian fleet visited France, to be received with such exaggerated enthusiasm. It was during these celebrations that on Oct. 28 the late President Carnot made the famous toast at Toulon, saying: "I drink to the friendship of two great nations, and through them the peace of the world." Despite its friendship for France Russia was forced into a commercial treaty with Germany in March of last year, Emperor William having intimated that unless such an agreement were reached only war could follow.

THE NEW CZAR.

The Grand Duke Nicholas Who Now Becomes Ruler.

The Grand Duke Nicholas, czarevitch of the great northland, who now becomes autocrat of all the Russias, is not the sturdy giant that his father was.

THE NEW CZAR.

Born in 1868, he developed so slowly and showed so few mental gifts that his parents called in a specialist to pronounce upon his health. This scientific gentleman pronounced the youth a congenial idiot, and was nearly killed for his frankness by the irascible czar, who gave him a swinging box on the ear.

But the young prince, if very far from being a genius, is certainly no fool. He has the weedy physique of his mother, is very sallow and has extraordinary expressionless, bluish-gray eyes, the bushy black eyebrows over which do not improve his appearance. He has lately grown a beard, which has given him a more manly aspect and made him look like the cousin he is of the Duke of York, but it is an ugly likeness. There is the square Tartar head and the curious Tartar snub nose, which pronounces him a Russian.

What kind of an emperor Nicholas Alexandrovitch will make it is difficult to tell; still, there is no reason to believe that while he will be quite as peace-loving as his father, he will be less inclined to play a great diplomatic part in Europe. He is more likely to resemble his great-uncle, Alexander I, and while anxious to introduce liberal institutions into his country, may probably succumb eventually to the councils of self-seeking courtiers. Still, he may have surprises in store for us and do something great. It is always the unexpected that happens, and he is still too young—only 26—to have definitely formed his character.

GEORGIA'S NEXT SENATORS.

Patrick Walsh and Augustus O. Bacon Selected by a Democratic Caucus.

ATLANTA, Nov. 2.—The Democratic caucus of the Georgia general assembly nominated two United States senators yesterday afternoon. The appointment of Senator Patrick Walsh by Governor Northen was unanimously confirmed by his election to fill out the unexpired term of the late Senator Colquitt.

For the long term, beginning March 4, 1895, Hon. Augustus O. Bacon, was nominated on the first ballot, he receiving 93 votes. Congressman Henry G. Turner received 37 votes, L. F. Garrard 21 and Patrick Walsh 9 votes for the long term. The nomination of Major Bacon was then made unanimous.

The contest has been a very heated one, and the candidates have been on the stump for the past few months. Of the four candidates, Bacon, Walsh and Garrard are recognized as silver men, and Turner represented the attitude of the administration on the financial question. The election will take place next Tuesday, but yesterday's caucus settles the matter.

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—Andrew Sanders, a freight conductor on the Chicago, Great Western road, was fatally wounded last night by one of four men, who were trying to steal a ride on his train. Sanders ordered them off and one of them fired at him three times, all the bullets taking effect. He died at midnight in the hospital.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The navy department has arranged for the speed trial of the torpedo boat Ericsson on the 8th inst., and has assigned the Dolphin, Cincinnati, Nina, Fern, Fortune and Iowa to serve as course boats.

LET THE VOTERS ANSWER.

"How does it come that when the Democrats went out of power in 1880 the Government had been run for seventy years, and there was but five millionaires in the whole United States, and was a good price, farms free of mortgages, and tramps and strikes were unknown; while after thirty years of Republican rule there are over 5,000 millionaires, land no price, and sufficed with mortgages, strikes on all hands and tramps by the million?"—Public Ledger, August 25th.

The C. and O. Railway Company was allowed $19 for passage of paupers. The Committee on Ways and Means were directed to pay off such of the city bonds as they may deem best.

Mrs. Robert Storer, A. C. Sphar and Jackson Green were each refunded $1.50 for taxes improperly assessed against them.

It was stated that Messrs. McNeely and Klipp claimed a narrow strip of ground between the City Park and the Hill City pike, and the Committee on Internal Improvements with the City Attorney added was directed to look into the matter with the view of securing the strip.

HIS FINGER FOR A NEW NOSE.

The Remarkable Operation of a London Surgeon on a Noseless Man.

The achievements of American surgeons in bold and extraordinary operations have long been the wonder of the world, but now from the other side of the Atlantic comes a story which shows that the old country is waking up a bit in the art of engraving living human flesh. A young man has put his finger to his nose, and it remains there permanently.

A few months ago a youth, whose nasal organ was missing as the result of an accident, called at Charing Cross hospital, London, with the request that the surgeons would supply the deficiency, artificially or otherwise. He expressed himself as willing to undergo any sort of treatment by which his disfigured face might be made fairly presentable and not absolutely repulsive to his best Sunday summer girl. Mr. Bloxam, the senior surgeon, took the interesting case in hand.

First the amputated finger of another patient was carved and fashioned to the semblance of a nose and then securely grafted on the face. But it was found that this mutilated digital appendage had not survived its cutting up. It was "dead" and failed to take fresh root.

The noseless man, nothing daunted, thereupon agreed to the surgeon's suggestion that one of his own (the patient's) fingers should be cut off to furnish a nasal organ, but in order that the finger should not be wasted in the event of this operation being unsuccessful it was only half amputated. The patient's arm being incased in plaster, for four weeks he held his own live finger to his face in the hope of its taking root. This it did. The portion which was still attached to his hand was then cut through and soon joined the rest in adhering firmly to the face. Although minus a finger, the young man now has a new nose of his own flesh and blood.

The transferred cartilage has been so manipulated by clever Dr. Bloxam that its original identity is entirely lost, and the further process of shaping it is now being proceeded with.—New York World.

Having Their Own Coffins Made

Twins named McLean from Harnett county, N. C., 86 years old, visited Raleigh on Wednesday on a queer mission. This was to buy copper of which to have their coffins made. They are now in fine health and are the oldest twins in North Carolina. They were quaintly dressed, one having on a richly embroidered vest he has worn for 43 years.—Baltimore Sun.

LOOK OUT FOR THE YELLOW DRAGON.

Danger Thought to Lurk in the Possibility of China Learning How to Fight.

China has about 400,000,000 of people. They know nothing of war. Educate them in the art, and they will reach out for the world. Speaking of a good authority on this subject, the Spokane Chronicle says:

"John Brisben Walker, editor of The Cosmopolitan, who for a time served in the Chinese army, holds that the powers of the world should try to stop the war between China and Japan. He argues that if this war lasts long enough to convince China that she must modernize her military system it will not be long before the yellow dragon will be the most formidable battle ensign on the earth. All of which coincides with the remark of Napoleon that it would be an evil day when the Chinese learned the art of war."

Religion and the Regulations.

The following story reaches me apropos of soldiers changing their religion: A soldier applied in the usual form to a certain C. O. for permission to change his religion. The C. O. was a little hazy about the regulations, but he was quite clear that there must be two parties to an exchange. "Very well," he replied. "I have no objection. But you must get a good man to exchange with you."—London Truth.

CLOSING RANKS.

The Democrats of Minerva and Mayslick All in Line.

The Meetings Last Night the Largest Ever Held at Those Points

The campaign in the Mayslick precincts ended last night with the largest and most enthusiastic meeting ever held in the county, outside of Maysville. Long before night the town was crowded, many coming from Fleming, Robertson and Nicholas. The "Fair View" Band furnished excellent music. The Democrats were jubilant. The large double school house did not hold half the crowd and the yard was filled with many eager voters, who could not get near enough to hear the speakers. Mr. George W. Sulser made the first address and his speech was a telling one, and was well received. Hon. Jno. F. Hager, of Ashland, came next and the audience went wild, as he poured hot shot into the Republicans and revealed the many sins of the G. O. P. and its dark-lantern annex, the A. P. A. The speaker dealt in solid facts and his exposition of the workings of the steel and sugar trusts convinced every one that the tariff was not only a tax but legalized robbery. Judge G. S. Wall came next and his old neighbors and friends gave him a rousing reception. He drew a clear cut and able comparison of the mission of the two great parties, showing that Democracy embraced all religions and all peoples, whilst Republicanism embraced no religion and no people, but was the creature of sectionalism and the creator of trusts. His remarks as to the county and local ticket met a hearty response.

As the audience was about to disperse loud calls of "Slattery" were heard and Mr. Tom Slattery ably responded in a few well chosen remarks.

The Democrats of Minerva closed their campaign last night with the largest and most enthusiastic political meeting ever held in that village. The little town was ablaze with fancy lanterns and decorations and everybody present had a grand time, and were well entertained with rousing speeches from the eloquent Hon. Bee Lee Hardin, A. O. Stanley and J. N. Kehoe. Minerva may be relied upon for its regular Democratic majority next Tuesday. The Dover band was out and delighted all with some of their patriotic and inspiring music.

Hon. Ben Lee Hardin will speak at Orangeburg this afternoon and Lewisburg to-night. Judge E. Whitaker and others will also speak at Orangeburg and County Attorney Newell and others at Lewisburg.

"PLAYING HORSE" WITH PUGH.

Republicans "Pulling" Him For Money to Be Used For County Tickets.

The Truth of Greenup: "The Republicans in several of the close counties in this Congressional district are trying to play a 'cute' game on Candidate Pugh and his bank account. They know he cannot be elected. All they want is his money, which they will use in trying to elect their county ticket and then Sammy can go to the dogs, or any place else. "An inexperienced observer with one eye and a limited stock of judgment can travel through this district and easily discover that somebody is 'playing horse' with Mr. Pugh.

"Mr. Pugh is a good citizen and a nice gentleman, and it is downright cruelty to keep deceiving him with such rot as he has been given since he was nominated.

"The Republican candidate, if he succeeds in holding down Hart's plurality to 2,500, may congratulate himself that he has done exceedingly well.

"There is no mistaking the sentiment of the Democracy in this district."

HAPPILY WEDDED.

Marriage of Mr. Francis Hord Clarke and Miss Elizabeth J. Wadsworth Thursday.

"Buffalo Trace," the beautiful and picturesque home of the late Hon. W. H. Wadsworth, was the scene of a happy nuptial event yesterday afternoon.

At the hour of 3 o'clock Mr. Francis Hord Clarke and Miss Elizabeth J. Wadsworth were quietly wedded, Rev. John S. Hays, D.D., officiating. The invitations were restricted to relatives of the couple and intimate friends of the two families.

A few hours after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Clarke left in the private car of Colonel Horace C. Burt, General Manager of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, for Chicago and other points in the Northwest. They will visit Colonel and Mrs. Burt at Omaha before they return from their bridal trip.

The groom is one of Maysville's successful young business men, Manager of the extensive establishment of J. H. Rogers & Co. He is the only son of the late John Clarke, while his bride is the only daughter of the late Hon. W. H. Wadsworth.

These two families have been intimately connected for years. The groom's father and the bride's father were law partners at one time, and the bride's father was "best man" at the marriage of the groom's father.

A host of friends join in good wishes to the couple who have thus been so happily united. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke will reside at No. 139 East Third street.

"RIGHT IN IT."

Is a Former Citizen of Germantown. He Has Struck a Bonanza at Galena, Kansas.

One member of the firm mentioned below is Dr. Harry Savage, son of Dr. Charles Savage, of Germantown. His friends in Mason will be glad to hear of his continued good fortune. "The Republican of Galena, Kansas, says:

"To use a slang term, Ricksecker, Savage & Co. are 'right in it,' and the indications are that they will stay in it for some time to come. They have five shafts in operation. Two that are known as the Ricksecker & Co.'s shafts, on the Shelbina ground; the Maude Woodlan shaft, on the Ladies' Lease; the Mary Pepper and Moore & Co. shafts, on the Midway County land. These shafts produced this week sixty tons of clean zinc ore for which they received $21 per ton, and 250 tons of rough ore, at $3 per ton, or a total of $2,010 for the week's run. Some of the shafts have been paying good dividends for about a year, while others are yet in their infancy. Yet they will soon be full grown and take position beside the others. The face of ore in sight indicates an inexhaustible supply, and it is putting it mildly when we say, Ricksecker, Savage & Company have a big thing."

The Chinese fleet Wei Wei was in sight Oct. 14, and a naval engagement is expected at any time. There are only four foreigners among the officers and men of Chinese fleets.

FIRE IN TOLEDO.

A Five-Story Building Destroyed and Another One Damaged.

TOLEDO, Nov. 2.—The 5-story building at 324 Summit street, occupied jointly by the United States Express company and the People's Outfitting company, was gutted by fire that broke out at 12:20 this morning. The wholesale clothing store of Childs, Lee & Dunlap, next door, was in great danger for some time, but by hard work the firemen confined the flames to the express company's building, and whatever damage is done to Childs, Lee & Dunlap's stock is by smoke.

The loss to the express company will not exceed $10,000; the People's Outfitting company, $10,000; on building, $15,000. The amount of insurance can not be learned.

Stern, Block & Company occupied the second floor of the express company's building, with a heavy stock of clothing. They claim a loss of $20,000. It is said two of the People's Outfitting company's employees were seen to leave the building shortly before the fire broke out.

Epps escaped.

HAIR RAISING FRIGHTS.

Is the "Standing on End" Sensation a Real or an Imaginary One?

As a general rule unscientific opinions on a scientific subject are of but little value to the student and the investigator. Yet to be permitted to ask such questions appears to relieve one to a certain extent, even though the answer be far from satisfactory.

There is a variety of opinions among the authorities concerning the subject of the hair "standing on end" in time of extreme fright, some of which are tenable and altogether probable, others ridiculous in the extreme. The notion, if not it be, that the hair occasionally raises and lifts the hat is of extreme antiquity. In the oldest book in the Bible (Job iv, 14-15) I find the following: "Fear came upon me and trembling, which made all my bones to shake. Then a spirit passed before my face. The hair of my flesh stood up."

Do you remember what Virgil says about his hero in the celebrated vox faucibus hoestet passage? I read from Conington's translation:

While thus in agony I pressed
From house to house the endless quest,
The pale, sad specter of my wife
Confronts me larger than in life.
I stood appalled, my hair erect,
And fear my tongue tied utterances checked.

Macbeth relates his experience as follows:

Why do I yield to that suggestion
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair?
And again in Hamlet we read:

I could a tale unfold whose lightest words
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,
Thy knotted and combined locks to part
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine.

Similar instances of "hair raising" being mentioned in literature could be multiplied, but the above are sufficient, even without scientific corroboration, to prove that the phenomenon is not a freak of the imagination.

One of the authorities before me gives this opinion: "Plainly stated, the hair raising notion is without a substantial basis. In short, the sensation is only an imaginary one."

Hildreth says, "In such cases the hair actually stands erect, a result of a sudden contraction of the follicles."

Wilson's "Normal Condition of the Hair and Skin" says, "The phenomena of hair standing erect in cases of extreme terror cannot satisfactorily be explained."—St. Louis Republic.

Great Expectations.
